Author Q&A: Tami Franklin

Q1: What inspired you to write Un-Masked, Un-Broken, Healed & Set Free?

A: I wrote this book because I couldn't stay silent any longer. For years, I carried the weight of trauma, loss, and shame, believing healing was for everyone else. But God met me in the ruins and taught me that restoration isn't just possible, it's His promise. This book is my testimony and my offering to others who feel unseen or stuck in their pain. If my story can help just one person believe again, it was worth writing.

Q2: Who did you write this book for?

I wrote it for the woman crying in secret, the man battling demons and silently at war, the parent who's lost a child, the survivor who's still trying to piece their life back together. I wrote it for anyone who's ever questioned their very existence or wondered if healing was possible for them. This book is for those ready to walk out of survival mode and into a glorious, divine freedom.

Q3: How did your faith impact your healing journey and this book?

A: My faith is the foundation of everything. I've walked through more than I ever imagined possible, childhood trauma, mental, physical and emotional abuse, unspeakable tragedies, the earthly deaths of two of my children, and deep spiritual warfare. But it was the presence of God in the darkest places that taught me healing isn't about perfection, it's about surrender. Every chapter of this book was written with prayer, tears, extreme warfare against the enemy that tried to silence me and the reminder that God doesn't waste anything, especially not our pain. Even that is holy ground.

Q4: What message do you want readers to walk away with?

A: That what broke you doesn't have the final say, God does. I want readers to know that no matter how shattered their life may feel, God is still writing their story. Healing is possible. Redemption is real. And your voice, your story, and your purpose still matter.

Q5: What's next for you?

A: I am currently preparing for upcoming book signings in Alabama, Illinois, Texas, and Arizona, speaking engagements including the Steps to Freedom Women's Conference, and continuing to expand House of Hope & Healing and the G.O.T. Foundation through outreach, media, and community initiatives.
